

Inventions:

1. Edible Rainbow

When John Muir was 16 years old, his usually very strict father gave him permission to get out of bed 5 hours earlier.

John thought this extra time was a 'precious gift'.

He used it to whittle wood into a clock.

He then invented an alarm clock that rocked him out of bed!

What would you do with any extra time you might have?

Hamish, aged nearly 4 years old, likes to spend his time with Captain (adult) in the kitchen.

He loves all the bright colours in the fruit and vegetable basket.

With VERY STRICT supervision from Captain, he likes to chop up the fruit and vegetables. Look how careful he is to keep his fingers away from the sharp side of the blade.

When everything is chopped, or grated nicely, he shapes it into a beautiful rainbow.

He saves a few bits for something else.

What a colourful and useful invention this is?!

Hamish can hardly wait until it's time to eat his edible rainbow!

He is very happy to share it with the whole family!

Good luck with your own invention- whatever it may be!
